

Marcha Orientalis

These march, already called marcha orientalis, corresponded to a frontier along the Danube from the Traungau to Szombathely and the Raba river including the Vienna basin.

Rating: Not Rated Yet

Price

Salesprice with discount

Sales price 96,00 €

Ask a question about this product

Description The March of Pannonia was set apart from the Duchy of Friuli in 828 and set up as a march against Moravia within the East Frankish regnum of Bavaria. These march, already called marcha orientalis, corresponded to a frontier along the Danube from the Traungau to Szombathely and the Raba river including the Vienna basin. By the 890s, the Pannonian march seems to have disappeared, along with the threat from Great Moravia, during the Hungarian invasions of Europe. Upon the defeat of Margrave Luitpold of Bavaria at the 907 Battle of Pressburg, all East Frankish lands beyond the Enns river were lost.